ZOMBICON SHOOTING

1 A shooting at a Florida Zombicon event killed one person and injured four others, the Fort Myers Police Department said on Sunday in a social media post. Police asked attendees to share smartphone video from the incident at an event expected to draw more than 20,000 people. REUTERS

SANAFI AL-NASR KILLED

2 A U.S.-led coalition air strike has killed Sanafi al-Nasr, a Saudi citizen and the leading financier for al Qaeda and its Khorasan Group offshoot, the Pentagon said on Sunday. The Pentagon said al-Nasr had organized routes for new recruits to travel from Pakistan to Syria through Turkey and played a significant role in the group's finances. He was killed in an air strike on Thursday in northwest Syria, it said. Al-Nasr worked for al Qaeda's Iran-based network before taking charge of the militant group's finances in 2012. REUTERS

FIVE MIGRANTS DROWN

3 Five people, including a baby and two children, drowned and one was missing in two separate incidents of migrants trying to reach Greece from nearby Turkey on Sunday. The service said a sailboat early on Sunday reported it had recovered the body of a baby and had rescued 11 migrants off the Kastellorizo island. REUTERS

VEGETARIAN FESTIVAL

7 Devotees of the Chinese Bang Neow Shrine carry an idol on a palanquin as firecrackers explode during the annual Vegetarian Festival in the southern Thai town of Phuket on October 18, 2015. During the festival, which begins on the first evening of the ninth lunar month and lasts nine days, religious devotees slash themselves with swords, pierce their cheeks with sharp objects and commit other painful acts to purify themselves, taking on the sins of the community. GETTY IMAGES

MERKEL IN A BIND

4 German Chancellor Angela Merkel offered Turkey financial aid and the prospect of faster progress on its bid to join the European Union on Sunday in return for badly-needed help in stemming the flow of migrants to Europe. Merkel said Germany could help accelerate the path to visa-free travel to the EU for Turks. REUTERS

VEHICLES MIRED IN MUD

5 Crews reopened a key portion of a major California highway closed when flash floods sent a torrent of mud and debris onto the roadway, trapping dozens of motorists, officials said. All lanes of Interstate 5, which runs from Mexico to Canada, were reopened, the California Highway Patrol said. Two major roadways were closed on Thursday when flash floods hit parts of the state. Forecasters warned of possible thunderstorms that could trigger more flash floods going into the weekend. REUTERS

EGYPT'S ELECTION

6 Egyptians turned out in low numbers on Sunday to vote in the first phase of an election hailed by President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi as a milestone on the road to democracy but shunned by critics who say the new chamber will rubber stamp his decisions. REUTERS

Parents under investigation after baby found in LOVE Park
A 2-year-old found wandering in LOVE Park just before midnight on Friday as temperatures dipped is now in the city's custody.

Police said no formal charges have yet been filed against the baby's parents, a 27-year-old female and a 24-year-old male, who were also staying in LOVE Park and said the baby wandered off.

"The parents stated that they had been kicked out of where they were staying last night and were spending the night in Love Park," the police report stated. "The parents had fallen asleep and the 2-year-old boy wandered off."

Police transported the baby to Children's Hospital of Philadelphia for evaluation after finding it around 11:50 p.m. wearing a green long-sleeve shirt, black running pants with a white stripe down the sides, a diaper and no shoes or socks.

The parents called police shortly after the infant was recovered to report it missing. They were sleeping in a different area of the park from where the boy was found.

The baby is in the custody of the Department of Human Services, and the investigation into the incident is ongoing, police said. SAM NEWHOUSE

Fattah Jr. trial set to continue

Chaka Fattah Jr. SAM NEWHOUSE

The embattled congressman's son is on trial first.

DAN KELLEY
@MetroPhilly
dan.kelley@metro.us

The trial of Chaka Fattah Jr., who is representing himself in a fraud trial where he faces a maximum possible sentence of 418 years, is scheduled to continue today in Philadelphia federal court.

Prior to his trial, Fattah Jr. accused the government of indicting him in an attempt to get him at his embattled congressman father, Fattah Sr., who was indicted over the summer after seven years of rumors of a federal probe into how he financed his 2007 campaign for mayor of Philadelphia.

Opening arguments began Friday in the case against Fattah Jr., 32, a former educational consultant, photographer and entrepreneur who is accused of funding lavish personal lifestyle by lying to banks, ripping of the School District of Philadelphia and skirting taxes.

Fattah's ex-girlfriend, Assistant U.S. Attorney Paul Gray told jurors, was prepared to testify that Fattah's interests were "clubs, restaurants and clothes. Taxes, not so much."

Gray said that Fattah moved into a $600,000 luxury condo at the Ritz Carlton while telling a bank that his business didn't have income.

Fattah, however, said that he worked hard to get a school for disadvantaged youth up and running.

"I worked day and night while other employees were on vacation," Fattah Jr. said, "sometimes out of the country."

The lavish spending, the gambling, the luxury cars? Those, Fattah said, were legitimate expenses related to finding clients for a concierge business focused on helping wealthy people get exclusive restaurant reservations and book travel.

"Nobody can say you can't have a party," Fattah said.

Throughout opening arguments, Fattah's father, U.S. Rep. Chaka Fattah Sr., sat in the courtroom with his wife, NBC10 news anchor Renee Chenault-Fattah, at some points smiling as his son explained his case to jurors.

"I'm very proud of my son, yesterday, today and every day," the congressman said during a break in the proceedings.

Rep. Fattah Sr. was charged in August with Fattah Jr. with accepting bribes, using federal funds to repay campaign debts and using campaign contributions to pay his son's student loan debts.

He has long said that the charges against him are the result of a long-standing investigation by overzealous prosecutors, including Gray, who is handling both cases.

"Next week, I'm going to provide information publicly to show that Mr. Gray has for eight years been improperly and illegally taking action against me and my son," the congressman said.

March to fight human trafficking

The Philly area has a high rate of human trafficking.

ERNEST OWENS
@MrErnestOwens
Mr.ErnestOwens@gmail.com

Over a hundred supporters walked a mile from City Hall to Independence Mall on Saturday to bring awareness to human trafficking around Philadelphia.

The Hope Bag Mission collaborated with the A21 Campaign for their 2nd Annual "Walk For Freedom" global event. This was the first time Philadelphia ever hosted an event for human trafficking at this capacity.

"Philadelphia is one of the top five major hubs for human trafficking in America ... most people don't know that our interstate transportation makes us the most susceptible," said Kelli Caldwell, associate director of The Hope Bag Mission, a nonprofit that provides emergency care items and products to groups housing rescued girls of human trafficking. "Human trafficking is the forced prostitution of young people — 98 percent of all prostitution isn't by personal choice."

Numerous guests and participants were also in there in light of the recent prostitution sting that led to multiple arrests in nearby Camden, New Jersey, last week.

"There was a sting on the Main line this summer and one in Camden this week — it won't end unless we do something about it," said Lisa Robinson, 34, a local social work volunteer and #PhillyWalkForFreedom participant. "Our local officials need to step up to do more on this issue and stop being hypocrites."

"Restorative justice is what's needed for victims, we can't have a public official relationship based solely on fear," Democratic City Council-at-Large candidate, Helen Gym, told the crowd at Independence Mall.

Toward the end of the event, Sharon Hackney-Robinson, founder of The Hope Bag Mission, shed tears of joy.

"I'm so grateful that despite all of the hurdles we had in planning this event, so many came out and were receptive to helping change this cycle," she said.

"There was a sting on the Main line this summer ... it won't end unless we do something about it."

Catholic bishops debating family issues still split on divorcees and gays

Roman Catholic bishops debating family issues at a three-week gathering remain deeply divided on key issues such as how to minister to homosexuals and divorced couples.

Disagreements between conservatives and progressives has sometimes led to an atmosphere of conflict, increasing the risk that the meeting, known as a synod and due to end next Sunday, will end inconclusively.

The synod, which brings together more than 300 bishops, delegates and observers, is supposed to prepare a final paper of proposals for Pope Francis, who may write his own document.

Since his election in 2013, Francis has given hope to progressives who want him to forge ahead with his vision of a more inclusive Church. But divisions were laid bare last week by the leak of a letter to the pontiff by 13 conservative cardinals bitterly complaining the meeting was stacked against them.

Archbishop Charles Chaput of Philadelphia, an outspoken conservative, wrote in The Wall Street Journal that "anxiety about the final product (the synod document) runs high."

NJ reinvents itself with crops, tourism

The Garden State is growing its economy by getting back to its roots.

Craving a taste of his native Liberia 4,500 miles away, maintenance worker Alfred Jones drove just 20 miles from his New Jersey home and waded knee deep into rows of pick-your-own African vegetables at Morris Gbolo's World Crops Farm.

The Garden State's newest crops were ready for harvest and Jones plucked baseball-sized eggplants known in Liberia as bitter balls and a tiny yet tangy plant called kittely to make the traditional stews he loved as a boy.

"It tastes and smells very much like home," said Jones, 75, who emigrated in 1979 and lives in nearby Glassboro.

New Jersey, officially nicknamed "The Garden State" since 1954, is striving to revitalize its farming sector. It is seizing on trends such as the "Eat Local" movement, agritourism and ethnic crops that appeal to a growing population of Asian, Hispanic and African residents, including those flocking to Gbolo's fields in Vineland.

The slogan has long confounded travelers whose only glimpse of the state is from its New Jersey Turnpike, with views of refineries and gargantuan fuel tanks. But the state has found new ways to pump up its Garden State credibility, boosted by proximity to neighboring New York City and Philadelphia, whose citizens often consider New Jersey their own backyard.

With roughly one-tenth of the U.S. population living within 100 miles of central New Jersey — much of it affluent — the state is in a geographic sweet spot for agritourism, said Brian Schilling, a specialist with Rutgers Cooperative Extension, linked to the state university.

Even at $150 a ticket, Farm to Fork dinners regularly sell out, and a Tour de Farm cycling and tasting tour that started in 2013 with 100 riders has grown exponentially to more than 1,000 riders, said organizer Mitchell Morrison.

New Jersey's location is the reason the legislature approved the nickname in the first place in 1954, said Richard VanVranken, a Rutgers agricultural agent.

"It was about everything in New Jersey being ripe for the picking for New York and Philadelphia. That drives a lot of what we do, being able to serve the huge markets that we're right in the middle of," VanVranken said.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING AND PUBLIC COMMENT PERIOD PHILADELPHIA HOUSING AUTHORITY

The Philadelphia Housing Authority (PHA) is a participant in the Moving to Work Demonstration Program (MTW) pursuant to an Amended and Restated Moving to Work Agreement (MTW Agreement) with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). The MTW Agreement defines the terms and conditions under which PHA is a participant in the MTW Program and requires PHA to submit an MTW Annual Plan for HUD review and approval. PHA's MTW Annual Plan for Fiscal Year 2016 was originally submitted to HUD in January 2015, and approved by HUD in September 2015.

PHA is seeking public review and comments on a proposed amendment to the FY 2016 MTW Annual Plan concerning PHA's plans to convert certain public housing units to project-based assistance under the Rental Assistance Demonstration (RAD) program. The units consist of 203 vacant and uninhabitable scattered site public housing units as well as 470 public housing units managed by an Alternate Management Entity at Southwark Plaza Apartments (also known as Courtyard Apartments at Riverview). The proposed amendment provides information required by HUD concerning PHA's RAD conversion plans. The proposed amendment is incorporated in its entirety into the FY2016 MTW Annual Plan through an attachment entitled "Rental Assistance Demonstration Significant Amendment". It is available for public review and downloading on PHA's website at www.pha.phila.gov under the "Latest News" section or may be picked up at the following locations:

Grades, tests and letters of recommendation — for high school

For eighth graders, the long process of where to go to high school begins now.

DAN KELLEY
@MetroPhilly
dan.kelley@metro.us

In a crowded room of the Pennsylvania Convention Center on Friday, thousands of students grabbed piles of literature about how to apply to schools touting specializations in art, science, ROTC and media communications.

This wasn't a college fair, and these weren't high school seniors.

The students were mostly eighth graders, who, sometimes on their own and sometimes with parents or teachers, were trying to figure out where they would go to high school.

"The process is a lot like filling out an application for college," said Nikki Tellis, a parent and administrator at Global Leadership Charter School, "There are letters of recommendation, essays and test scores."

This is somewhat of an annual ritual in the Philadelphia School District, which has long had magnet schools which field far more applications than there are slots, and charter schools touting specialized themes, solid discipline or higher test scores.

They were joined by traditional neighborhood high schools, which come to the fair touting specialized career programs within the public school system.

Add to that mix city-wide admissions schools, which, like charter schools, offer specialized themes, but unlike magnet schools, do not require high test scores and grades to get in.

The array of choices can be dizzying.

"It's very overwhelming," said Shannon Norman. "The schools have a lot to offer, but we're looking for a school that will challenge him."

Him, in this case was her son Desmond, who, unlike a lot of this crowd, was a home-schooled 10th grader, looking for a school to spend his junior and senior year.

He wants to be a psychiatrist, and said he was interested in Science Leadership Academy at Beeber.

"It's interesting to see how many schools there are," Desmond said.

The administrators, teachers and students say finding a match isn't easy.

At a certain point, students will be forced to confront their interests, their abilities, and the chances of getting in.

"When it's time to make a choice the fantasy is gone," said Abdul-Mubdi Muhammad, principal of John Bartram High School.

Students in Bartram's catchment who don't make applications to other schools will likely end up at Bartram. But it's also true that students from outside Bartram can, and do, apply to the school because it offers career training in design, film and video production or because it offers in-class extra-curricular courses in chess.

"Every school has a decent number of applicants, because students have to make that choice," Muhammad said.

But overshadowing

such fairs are questions of equity. In a city this large, there are students who can't manage the application process, or whose parents don't have the language skills or the motivation to help.

"If you don't have a parent that cares about this, you are stuck," said Lori Bartol.

She attended the fair with her daughter

Leandra Brinkmann, a seventh grader, hoping to get pointers for when her turn comes.

"It's pretty crazy that Philadelphia has to be like this," Bartol said. "You should just be able to send your kids to a school, without having to worry about fate, your parents, what neighborhood you are born into, or how well you do on those ridiculous tests."

Reputed mobster faces trial for 1978 'Goodfellas' heist

Vincent Asaro's criminal trial is set to begin on Monday in Brooklyn federal court before an anonymous jury.

For nearly four decades, it remained one of America's most infamous unsolved crimes: On Dec. 11, 1978, a crew of masked men stole $6 million in cash and jewelry from a Lufthansa Airlines cargo building at John F. Kennedy Airport in New York.

The brazen heist, which helped inspire the gangster movie "Goodfellas," left authorities largely frustrated until last year, when federal prosecutors in Brooklyn

"To pull it off at an airport — you hate to say criminals should get credit, but you have to credit them for pulling it off."

Abadinsky

charged Vincent Asaro, a member of the Bonanno organized crime family, with participating in the theft.

Most of the other suspected participants in the robbery disappeared, were killed or died, making it difficult for authorities to piece the case together.

"Once you kill one guy, you gotta kill them all, because otherwise they'll get scared," said

Howard Abadinsky, an organized crime expert and a professor at St John's University in New York. "He's one of the few guys that's still alive."

Asaro, now 80, is accused of a litany of crimes stretching from 1968 to 2013, including murder, racketeering, arson and robbery. He was arrested alongside four other alleged members of the Bonanno no family, who were charged with crimes unrelated to the Lufthansa heist.

Those defendants, Asaro's son Jerome, Jack Bonventre, Thomas DiFiore and John Ragano, all pleaded guilty and were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 21 to 90 months.

Asaro's defense lawyer, Gerald McMahon, did not respond to a request for comment but has said Asaro denies all the allegations.

The only man ever convicted for the Lufthansa heist was Louis Werner, a cargo agent and the inside man. Werner passed along the idea for the robbery in order to settle gambling debts.

Suspect dead after killing deputy at Minn. hospital

St. Cloud Hospital in Minnesota GOOGLE MAPS

A sheriff's deputy was shot and killed on Sunday by a suspect who was being guarded at a Minnesota hospital, and the assailant later died, state authorities said.

The deputy, who was guarding a person under investigation, was shot and killed around 5:15 a.m. CDT at St. Cloud Hospital, according to the Minnesota Department of Public Safety.

Security officers responded and "subdued" the suspect, who later died, the agency said. No other hospital patients or staff were injured during the incident, which was confined to a patient room.

St. Cloud is located about 60 miles northwest of Minneapolis.

Two injured in separate shark attacks off Hawaii

Two men have been seriously injured in separate shark attacks off Hawaii within the space of a few hours, local media reported on Sunday.

A 44-year-old man was swimming toward a beach in Kailua on the island of Oahu when he was attacked shortly before noon on Saturday, the Honolulu Star-Advertiser reported. He sustained injuries to his lower legs.

Later in the day, a 32-year-old was bitten in his left foot as he swam off a beach in Honolulu, the television station KITV reported.

The attacks were the sixth and seventh reported in the waters off Hawaii this year, the Star-Advertiser said. REUTERS

Get ready for President Lohan

What could make Kanye West's 2020 presidential bid seem even the least bit plausible? An even more absurd celebrity contender, that's what. Enter Lindsay Lohan, who took to Instagram this weekend to announce her intentions to run for president that year as well. "In 2020 I may run for president," she posted along with a photo of her at the 2012 White House Correspondent's Dinner, giving West an at-mention and everything. "The first thing I would like to do as president is take care of all of the children suffering in the world," she added with a photo of her and West together. "Queen Elizabeth showed me how by having me in her country." But bad news for Lohan, who turns 35 in July 2021, as she's actually constitutionally disqualified because she'll still be too young for the job.

Checking in on Lamar Odom

So, how was your weekend? Because Lamar Odom's was pretty good, considering. The former NBA star reportedly woke up Friday night for the first time since being hospitalized following a four-day bender at a Nevada brothel, according to E! News. He only stayed awake long enough to offer Khloe Kardashian a "hey baby" before going back to sleep, but still. He also started breathing on his own and was moved from his bed to a chair for the first time on Saturday. According to the source, Odom is "heading in the right direction. This is great progress but there is always the possibility for setbacks."

Growing up in the theater

Musical comedy "Bullets Over Broadway" is touring for the first time.

RACHEL VIGODA
@rachelvigoda
rachel.vigoda@metro.us

For Rick Grossman, playing a born-and-bred New Yorker who's spent his whole life in the theater is not much of a stretch.

The actor's latest role is Broadway producer Julian Marx in the touring production of "Bullets Over Broadway," based on Woody Allen's 1994 movie. Allen also wrote the libretto. "The character is a true New York guy. He got into the theater at an early age, and then became a Broadway producer, of both hits and failures. And he loves what he does. He loves the theater," says Grossman, himself a third generation performer whose grandparents came from the Yiddish theater.

"It was easy for me to embrace the character," he adds. "Same background — my ethnic roots are similar — and I've been in the theater my whole life, acting and directing and producing. So I have an affinity for this character."

We spoke with Grossman to find out more about the show before "Bullets" comes to Philly for the first time.

This is the first time "Bullets Over Broadway" is touring, right?

Yes, this is the first national tour — the only time it's been seen was in the Broadway run. So we're all very excited about that.

What's the show about?

It's very colorful, very lively, very funny. It revolves around a young playwright who's trying to get his play produced on Broadway, and has a producer — the role that I play — who picks it up. And it deals with how they get the money and the interesting characters that get involved, backing the show financially — and some of the strings attached. It's in the early 1920s, so it has a lot of that color. It has mobsters.

So you're watching a play within a play?

You're watching them

"Bullets Over Broadway" is at the Academy of Music Oct. 27 through Nov. 1. Tickets are on sale now at Kimmelcenter.org.

rehearse the play, and there are a lot of funny incidents that go on, during the tryouts, bringing it to Broadway — what goes into making a show.

Is it a screwball comedy?

I'd call it a zany musical comedy. [Laughs] People who are familiar with Woody Allen's work, especially in the '70s and '80s, know it has that craziness and neurosis.

You're taking this show to 46 cities. How do you keep up the energy?

It can become a little wearying. I've done several tours throughout my career; you have to learn how to pace yourself. When you're doing the 205th performance, you need to give your audience the same performance that you gave in the first one. That's something that was ingrained in me as a young actor, when I was fortunate enough to study with one of the great acting teachers of all time, Stella Adler. She was the coach to Marlon Brando and many others. She said, "Each night, you owe your audience the same level of professionalism you started with. Never give them anything less." And each night, before I go on stage, no matter what role I'm doing, that message comes back to me.

Do you have any other backstage mantras or rituals?

My mother was a big influence on me; she was an actress herself. So my little ritual is I just kind of look up and say, "OK, Ma, keep your eye on me tonight."

NEXT UP: "Matilda"

On deck for Broadway Philadelphia is "Matilda the Musical," coming to the Academy of Music Nov. 17 to 29. The show, based on the Roald Dahl book, was a hit on Broadway, winning four Tony Awards. Like "Bullets Over Broadway," this will be "Matilda's" first run in Philly.

The show follows young Matilda, a smart, precocious girl bumping up against her comically obnoxious and conniving parents and the cruel school headmistress, Miss Trunchbull, aided by her kind teacher Miss Honey.

We're told that Bryce Ryness, playing Miss Trunchbull, steals the show. He's been in several Broadway productions, including "Hair" and "Legally Blonde."

'Beasts of No Nation' will surprise no one

Idris Elba is predictably great in the predictable "Beasts of No Nation," which is in theaters and on Netflix. NETFLIX

"Beasts of No Nations" is the first film to hit theaters and Netflix at the same time. You should see it on a big screen to savor the phantasmagoric sights and sounds. But perhaps a TV set is the right place, where expectations are slightly lower. A movie about African child soldiers starring Idris Elba as a psycho military leader, it's exactly what you'd expect from a movie about African child soldiers starring Idris Elba as a psycho military leader. It offers no shocking or even novel insights about what makes a small boy take up arms. And Elba, as you would no doubt imagine, is both frightening and charismatic as a ranting monster who sways the young into his questionable charge.

It should be more than this. It's no less than the latest from Cary Fukunaga, who achieved cinephile god status by directing every episode of "True Detective's" first season. He's good at making on-the-run productions look handsome. More to the point, he whips out long takes that make viewers squelch. There are plenty of those in this harrowing saga, prowling about massacres and battlegrounds, trailing young Agu (Abraham Attah), whose village is wiped out in the midst of a tangled conflict, leading him to be snatched up and armed by Elba's baddie.

New on Netflix

MATT PRIGGE

@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Fukunaga aims for something like the Russian film "Come and See," a hallucinatory grinder that also trailed a child lost amid war. But his shots are so awesome you can't help but notice the technique. The nation is never specified, Commandant is billed only as "Commandant" and we're encouraged to see unimaginable horrors from an innocent child's remove; the specifics of the strife aren't important to Agu, so they're not important to the film. It winds up backfiring, though, reducing it to an outsider less concerned with terror abroad than using a painfully basic story to show off his mad moves.

Alan Alda meets Steven Spielberg

The legendary actor talks "Bridge of Spies" and its connections to "M*A*S*H."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Alan Alda and Steven Spielberg have a lot in common. For one thing, they've both been involved in work about war that portrays it simultaneously critically and humanely. Spielberg has films like "Saving Private Ryan," while Alda has 11 seasons of "M*A*S*H," which he not only starred in but also sometimes directed, including its finale — still the most watched episode in television history. Alda has a small role in Spielberg's new "Bridge of Spies," which follows an American lawyer (Tom Hanks) trying to negotiate a trade for spies on both sides of the divide. But that's fine by him. He just wanted to watch a fellow director do his magic.

Given your interests, it seems like you and Spielberg would travel in the same circles. Had you know him long?
I bumped into him a couple times socially, but we didn't know each other

(Alan Alda, left, stars with Tom Hanks and Amy Ryan in Steven Spielberg's "Bridge of Spies," in theaters now. JAP BUITENDIJK; GETTY IMAGES)

really. One of the reasons I wanted to do this was I wanted to watch him work. It was really lovely to see. He's so in command of his own work and the whole process of movie-making. You really get a view of the best kind of moviemaking. There's no indecision, but there is experimentation. I've worked with people who could only do things one way. If the set burned down they were lost. With him it's just an opportunity to make the most of what he has. He started shooting movies in his backyard when he was 10. So did I. But he made "E.T." before I did.

Both you and Spielberg have portrayed — in very different tones but with the same passion — war in ways that are critical of it and also deeply humanistic.

It's hard to ignore that. If you take a realistic view of it, there is heroism. There are people looking out for one another.

But then there's the destruction of life. It's tragic that humans do that. If all you do is focus on the heroism, then you don't take into account the danger to ourselves, the loss of feeling secure that you're doing the right thing if you casually kill people you have nothing against. Somebody put up on Twitter — and I don't remember saying this and I don't know who wrote it — but on "M*A*S*H" someone said that war is hell. But war is worse than hell, because with hell, who goes to hell? The priest says, "The sinners, I guess." But in a way they all get killed — the innocent, the bystanders. Most of them are bystanders who get killed. That sounds worse. War is the only thing you can experience like hell on this side of death. I personally don't believe in hell, but war is worse than what they say hell is.

Harsh times

"Bridge of Spies" re-creates a period during the Cold War both you and Spielberg probably remember very well. What was it like returning to that scary time?

Some of it is Steven's own experiences as a boy, like filling the bath tub. He told me that came from his life. It's hard to imagine what it was like. I wasn't a kid when you had to learn how to hide under your desk. I was older than he was. But I knew what it was like to hear about it at that time. Now it seems like so far from our experience that it's hard to understand what it was like for those kids who thought they might be incinerated, the way the Japanese kids were only a few years earlier. The pressure was not that they'd fight in some place and die for their country, but that you might disappear in an instant, or have a long, slow, painful death. We saw those pictures of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. It was a terrifying time to be in. People were building shelters in their backyard.

LISA WEIDENFELD
@LisaWeidenfeld

"Crazy Ex-Girlfriend" might be one of the more unusually named programs out there, but star Rachel Bloom says she and creator Aline Brosh McKenna never had any doubts about the title. "It was always 'Crazy Ex-Girlfriend.' It was such a strong title," Bloom says. "We knew it was a musical, and it was called 'Crazy Ex-Girlfriend,' and then we worked back from there."

The result is a show about the unbalanced Rebecca, who spontaneously quits her job as a high-powered attorney in New York after running into her high school boyfriend, who says he lives in West Covina, Calif. One short cross-country move later, she's ready for them to fall back in love, and the show explores this concept with the addition of a few well-timed musical numbers that are Rebecca's imagination of what the world around her should be.

"We've been tinkering with how much of a theater fan Rebecca is. But I definitely think theater is where her soul resides," says Bloom. Rebecca isn't exactly ready to admit that about herself, however. "I think she's bottled it because she's emotionally stifled. So it's the type of thing where she has Broadway CDs, and when she's alone she listens to them, but she wouldn't tell anybody."

Poor Josh, the guy who dumped her in high school, is in for some big surprises once Rebecca moves to town. "A lot of the tension in Season 1 is going to be why Rebecca tells herself she's in West Covina versus why she's really there," Bloom says, "and those two things are going to start to knock heads more and more." The "Crazy" in the title isn't meant to be taken lightly. Says Bloom: "She's someone who needs help. She absolutely does." While the pilot sees her proudly ditching some meds, that won't be the end of the issue. "We have a whole episode that we're planning that we're going to focus on her depression and her anxiety," Bloom says.

Rebecca isn't a total mess, though. Those attorney skills will still come in handy. "She never really got in touch with herself, but she's really good at her job," Bloom says. "When she goes to West Covina, she's going to be good at her job — so much so that she doesn't even think about it. She's just like, oh, right, XYZ, I'm going to go stalk Josh now," says Bloom.

There are about 100 charter schools in Philadelphia. About 64,000 students are enrolled in these institutions — about double the amount since 2007 — making up 30 percent of all Philly public-school students, including those in magnet schools. And they're tough to get into: 85 percent of these schools having waiting lists, sometimes with 1,000 or more students (in those cases, schools hold lotteries to determine enrollment).

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Charter schools 101

Your guide to the increasingly popular alternative to traditional education.

RAQUEL LANERI
@RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

Lately, there has been a lot of talk about charter schools — billionaires fund them, presidential candidates want to expand them.

But what, exactly, are they? And, more important, should you send your kid to one?

Charter schools are vast and complex, but essentially they're free public schools that are independently operated and managed. That means while they can focus on specific subjects (such as STEM — science, technology, engineering and math — or the performing arts) or employ alternative classroom methods (such as Montessori), they have to adhere to certain district-wide requirements.

"The premise for charter schools is autonomy in exchange for accountability," says DawnLynne Kacer, executive director of the Charter Schools Office in Philadelphia.

For example, students in Pennsylvania charter schools must take the standard state assessment tests all traditional public school students do — and achieve certain scores.

"What the charter law says is: However you get to academic success is your choice — as long as you're maintaining the health and safety of students and not violating their civil rights," Kacer says. "But we are going to evaluate you based on your performance on the state tests."

So, with all the competition to get in — and the dizzying variety of charter schools there are to choose from — how do you know when the hassle is worth it, or if charter schools are even right for your kid? And which ones she should apply to, anyway? Kacer demystifies the process for us.

Know your child

"Any student could benefit from a charter program — it's about finding the right one for your particular student," says Kacer. Figure out your kid's interests and learning habits, and whether those will be met in a traditional school. Are they self-directed learners? Do they learn more through action than lecture? Do they want a school with advanced music programs or one focused on mathematics? Then, look at a variety of school to find the ones with educational models that would complement those needs and passions.

Location, location, location

Charter schools are all over Philadelphia, and while some are required to admit a certain percentage of students from the immediate area, parents can send their kids to school in pretty much any part of the city. "But if you have a younger student — especially grades K through 2, or K through 5 — you probably don't want them to travel so far to go to school," says Kacer. "We have a directory of charter schools that organizes them by region of the city. That way you can start narrowing down your choices by geography." If there's a school that fits your child's interests that's farther away than you'd like — or if you're unable to get a seat in the charter school closest to you — inquire about busing or other modes of transportation.

Do your research

You'll want to attend an open house or take a tour of whichever schools pique your interest. "And just like selecting a district-operated school, we would encourage [parents] to reach out to their network of friends and neighbors and peers and learn more about the schools from word of mouth and what the experience of current parents is," Kacer says. Because charter schools operate independently of the rest of Philadelphia's public institutions, even basic things such as school day start times, length of the school year, available Advanced Placement courses and tutoring could differ wildly.

"Charter schools, they tend to have their own culture," says Kacer. "They have their own code of ethics and core values that can lead them to focus on different things, so we want to make sure that parents and families have all the information they need in order to make the right decision."

Apply to multiple schools

Yes, those dreaded waiting lists mean that if you find a few schools that suit your child's needs, apply to all of them.

"State law says any charter school that receives more applications for a grade than it has seats has to hold a lottery," says Kacer. "So putting in an application by no means means that you are guaranteed a

When to apply

Each charter school has its own application timeline and process, says Kacer, and it's different from the school district's enrollment window. "Many charter schools will not even be reviewing their applications until January; some charter schools take applications year-round. So we encourage parents and families to reach out to the school and find out when those are."

seat." (The one difference in Philly is the so-called Renaissance Charter Schools, which have taken over various neighborhood district schools — they take every applicant in the order received.)

"But for the vast majority of our charter schools, I think it's important that parents and families know that they are chosen by lottery, so I would absolutely encourage them to apply to more than one," Kacer says.

Charter school for everyone

Within the charter school universe, there are a lot of options when it comes to finding the perfect education for your child.

RAQUEL LANERI
@RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

There are as many kinds of charter schools as there are, well, flavors of ice cream or colors in a Big Box of Crayola crayons. And while some are fairly straightforward — you have an idea of what a performing-arts school is — some of the names of the more specialized programs can be confusing: What does Outward Bound mean, or blended learning? Here, we sort out some of the different programs that can make up a district's charter school offerings.

Subject-specific schools

The most straightforward of the bunch: subject-specific schools focus on a particular area of learning, such as STEM (science, technology, engineering and math) or the arts. But there are far more options, such as schools for architecture and design, or schools devoted to the medical arts, from nursing and science to hospital management.

Blended learning

These schools are brick-and-mortar institutions that combine teacher-led instruction and online learning. Also known as personalized learning, these programs provide students with tutors and targeted online activities that help them practice concepts they need help with, or give students who may be bored in the classroom extra or more-advanced work.

College prep

While all schools, ostensibly, prepare students for higher education, these institutions are particularly results-oriented, often folding in SAT or ACT prep into their curricula, or offering tutoring directly through the school. Some also require students to take at least one Advanced Placement test, but these programs can vary widely in terms of requirements and offerings, so do your research.

Experiential

This kind of education focuses on learning through doing, taking kids outside the classroom to learn real-world skills through internships, volunteering, research opportunities, study abroad and more.

Outward Bound

Known for its wilderness programs, Outward Bound has also teamed up with school districts and charter boards to open schools that, according to its website, "inject adventure and discovery" into learning, with a focus on teamwork, individual initiative and character. Outward Bound is a form of experiential school that also takes students out of the classroom in order to ground their education to the real world.

A variety of students can benefit from online learning, even in middle or high school. ISTOCK

More and more people are getting their college degrees online — are high school diplomas next?

RAQUEL LANERI
@RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

In Philadelphia, more than 5,000 students in grades K-12 attend a Pennsylvania cyber charter school. That is, they forgo the traditional brick-and-mortar school for the virtual world and take their classes online.

While more and more people are getting college degrees online, you don't often hear about grade- and high-schoolers doing their learning in front of a computer. Yet, says Andrew R. Campanella, president of National School Choice Week, these kinds of programs — unlike their higher-ed counterparts, which can sometimes be scams — are all accredited and highly regulated by the state. "It's a great option for students who want to set their own pace, or whose scheduling doesn't allow for a typical 8-to-4, Monday-through-Friday school week," he says.

In cyber schools, all direct instruction is provided online or in a virtual environment. That doesn't mean they can't offer extracurriculars or other supplemental services at a physical location. "These schools are absolutely required to meet the requirements of a student's individualized educational program for students with disabilities," says DawnLynne Kacer, executive director of the Charter Schools Office in Philadelphia. "They are also able to provide tutoring services in a physical location, as well as any special programming, so that would be your arts or your music."

The idea of letting a tween or teen take charge of their own education and leave the social environment of the classroom can be, well, scary. We asked Campanella and Kacer which students might benefit from going online.

The hyper-advanced

There are seventh graders who can perform math at a 12th grade level, but most of them aren't given the opportunity inside the classroom. "I don't know of any K-through-8s in the city that offer calculus," says Kacer. In the past, advanced students would have either been bused to the nearest high school or college for classes, taking time away from other subjects. Online learning can allow such advanced students to take courses more suited to their level without the hassle.

The student who excels at one subject but struggles in another

Sometimes a student who can do calculus at age 12 can struggle with reading "To Kill a Mockingbird" or other books that are often assigned at their grade level. Picking and choosing different classes at various grade levels is one of the upsides of an online education, both challenging the student in the subjects that she finds too easy and giving her extra attention in those with which she struggles.

The extracurricular enthusiast

Students who are on certain professional tracks — whether that's to be an Olympic athlete, a concert violinist or an actor — have to miss a lot of school because of travel, work or training. "It's logistically difficult for these students to be in the same school building Monday through Friday," says Kacer. Instead of constantly missing school and being intermittently in touch with teachers about catching up with work outside the classroom, cyber learning may help give them the kind of stability and flexibility they need in order to complete their education.

The person with an inconsistent schedule

Then there are the students who — because of an illness, a sick relative, a family problem or a job — can't make it to school because of more immediate responsibilities, last-minute emergencies or other commitments. Instead of being punished for missing yet another day, they can do their schoolwork on their own time through taking courses online.

How to ace a Skype interview

Four tips to help you land a job from far away.

TAYLOR ROBINSON
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

If you haven't had a Skype interview yet, chances are you will soon.

More and more companies are using Skype or Google Hangout to conduct first-round interviews, saving time and travel expenses.

But while most of us know how to interview in person, a remote meeting brings its own unique challenges — ones that can trip up even the most seasoned pro.

Which is why we've turned to Cara Press. As a career counselor at Bottom Line, a non-profit that mentors low-income and first-generation college students,

More companies are conducting first-round interviews via webcam. ISTOCK

Press knows a thing or two about interviewing on camera.

Mock interviews are a big part of Press' job, and lately, she's found herself preparing more and more students for ones that take place over the phone or a webcam. We asked her for her tips.

Prepare your environment

Interviewing over the computer calls for some preparation that we just don't deal with in an in-person interview — such as cleaning the room you'll be in or adjusting the lighting, says Press. "When I'm interviewing you, I shouldn't see your unmade bed or dirty laundry in the background." Despite the fact that you're interviewing in a nontraditional setting, "you still want to present your most polished self."

Also, be aware of noise. "Try to find a quiet place or let your roommates know that you can't be interrupted during that time," Press advises. She also suggests keeping a water bottle and your notes and questions nearby for easy access.

Test the technology

Webcam-based interviews require practice just as in-person ones do — but you should treat them as tech trial runs, too. "Practice ahead of time over Skype with a friend to make sure the connection is good," Press says. And because you could always run into a technical glitch or two, have some back-up. "Make a plan with the interviewer within the first few minutes about who will call who in case you get disconnected," she suggests.

Treat it like an in-person

Interview

Other than being over a computer, a Skype interview isn't that different from an in-person one. You still need to do your research on the company, dress professionally, be on time and ask smart questions. Eye contact can be tricky, however. Says Press: "Avoid looking at yourself on the big screen and instead look at the lens of the camera so that you appear engaged."

Smile!

We all get nervous during interviews, but smiling can help you loosen up — and help you land the job. "Most people want to work with other individuals who are friendly," Press says. "Remember to smile whether it's on the phone, over Skype, or in person. That's a big one that people tend to forget."

Detroit, Denver win OT thrillers

A look around the league as Week 6 wraps up.

LUKE MILLER
@MetroBOS
sports@metro.us

The Bears and Lions weren't the most anticipated matchup of the week, but when all is said and done their game may have been the most fun.

In a back and forth matchup where neither team led by more than eight points, oft-maligned quarterbacks Matthew Stafford (27 for 42, 405 yards, 4 TD, INT) and Jay Cutler (26 for 41, 353, TD, INT) combined for over 750 yards passing.

In overtime of the 37-34 Lions win, Stafford found Calvin Johnson with just over two minutes left in overtime on a 57-yard completion to immediately setup a Matt Prater field goal from 27 yards out that delivered the Lions (1-5) first win of the season.

Broncos 26, Browns 23 (OT)

The Browns went to overtime for the second straight week, but the results weren't as kind as their Week 5 win over Baltimore. Emmanuel Sanders had a 75-yard touchdown catch, and almost a game winner with 15 seconds left in regulation until replay said otherwise.

Bengals 34, Bills 21
LeSean McCoy returned to action with 90 rushing yards and a touchdown, but this week Tyrod Taylor was sidelined from the Bills offense. Two weeks after committing 17 penalties for 135 penalty yards in a loss to the Giants, the Bills drew 93 yards worth of penalties Sunday.

Dolphins 38, Titans 10
The Dan Campbell era in Miami got off to a strong start two weeks after the Dolphins' slow start to the season cost Joe Philbin his job. The Dolphins defense was invigorated, sacking Marcus Mariota six times and forcing the quarterback into four turnovers. Lamar Miller ran for 113 yards, almost doubling his total yardage through the first four games of the season.

Steelers 25, Cardinals 13
Martavis Bryant grabbed a slant pass and took it 88 yards to the house to ice the game for the Steelers. It was Bryant's second touchdown catch on the day from backup quarterback Landry Jones, brought in after Michael

The Broncos' defense has established itself among the best units in the NFL this season. GETTY IMAGES

Vick suffered a hamstring injury. The Cardinals struggled to maintain their trademark balance this week, passing for 414 yards but gaining only 66 on the ground.

Jets 34, Redskins 20
The Jets turned a tight game into a breeze by scoring 24 straight points to begin the second half. Ryan Fitzpatrick threw touchdowns to Brandon

Marshall and Eric Decker and ran for a third, and Chris Ivory had 196 total yards and another TD.

Vikings 16, Chiefs 10
The Vikings built a 13-0 lead early and spent the rest of the game watching it slowly evaporate before managing to hold on late. Adrian Peterson was largely held in check with 60 yards on 26 carries.

Texans 31, Jaguars 20
Brian Hoyer (24 for 36, 293 yards) and Blake Bortles (30 for 53, 331 yards) each threw three touchdown passes, but Bortles added three interceptions for the Jaguars. Arian Foster had 112 total yards and a touchdown in his third game back from injury. DeAndre Hopkins caught Hoyer's other two touchdowns, and added 148 yards through the air.

Keys to success as the Eagles host the Giants 'back in black'

Monday Night's prime-time battle between NFC East rivals will determine the division's leader.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

It looks like the Eagles could finally be back in business.

Could be.

After a slow start to their season — due to several slow starts to games this season — the Eagles have battled back to a 2-3 mark. And with the NFC East sluggish as a whole in 2015, a win against the 3-2 Giants Monday night will put the Eagles on top in the division.

Though the Eagles are 4.5 point favorites, and simulations on ESPN are predicting the Birds have close to a 70 percent chance to be the victor at Lincoln Financial Field in prime time, division games are almost always a coin toss.

They will certainly need to bring their "A game" and have luck on their side, but first place is finally within reach.

Here is (some of) what the Eagles will need to do Monday to bring home victory No. 3:

Monday's game, statistically, is make or break for both teams.
Read at metro.us.

Eli's coming

Eli Manning can pulverize an NFL defense. Just ask the 49ers, who narrowly were defeated last week by a last-second Giants drive.

The quarterback carved up the Niners for 441 yards and three touchdowns in Week 5, propelling them to the NFC East lead — a lead the Eagles can only snatch from New York if they can keep Manning in check.

"Not only has he only thrown two interceptions [this season]," Chip Kelly said, "he's only been sacked four times. He's getting the ball out of his hand quickly. He can recognize how people are defending their team. If coverage is rolled one way, he's automatically going another way.

"He doesn't stay on a receiver and say, 'Hey, I've got to throw the ball to this guy, so I'm going to wait for him to get open.' He's rapidly going through his progressions and putting themselves in a really good situation offensively, and they are throwing the ball a ton; he had 41 completions last week."

The Birds need to make sure they can keep track of all of New York's deadly weapons, especially if Odell Beckham Jr. and Reuben Randle to suit up and play.

Eli Manning lost to the Eagles twice last season — something the quarterback will likely use as fuel against Philly on Monday. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Stay two-dimensional

The Giants are the third best NFL team against the run. They've allowed just 403 yards in five games this season and just 3.5 yards per carry.

The reason New York has been effective enough to win three games (and nearly its other two as well) is due in part to their rush defense turning the opposition one-dimensional and relying on the pass game (where they happen to be ranked 30th of 32 teams in pass defense).

"I think a lot of people have tried to throw the ball on them a little bit more just because you may be banging your head against the wall, in terms of trying to run the football against that look," Kelly said, referring to the Giants run defense. "That's the first thing, and I think a lot of coaches on the defensive side of the ball will tell you that, 'Hey, we are going stop the run first, establish what we can do and try to make a team one-dimensional,' and that's how they have been successful on the defensive side."

Back in black

The Eagles wore all black for the first time last season during a prime-time game against the Giants.

Related to the uniforms or not (or to the fact that the crowd blacked out the stands with dark outfits of their own), the Eagles had a resounding 27-0 victory that was one of the high points of the 10-6, 2014 campaign.

Some more extracurricular activity is happening Monday as well, as the Eagles will honor Brian Westbrook and member of the 1960 NFL Champion Eagles Maxie Baughan Monday night as well. Both will enter the team's Hall of Fame. Perhaps these storied athletes from the past will serve as inspiration to those on the field attempting to mimic their success.
